Bristol Radical History Festival brings together history groups, publishers and the public for a day of talks, walks, performance, films, bookstalls and displays, uncovering radical histories in Bristol, the South West and beyond. From mutinous Bristolian soldiers to rebellious anarchist women, from Bristol's underground network of war resisters to its rioters of 1831, we promise a 'history from below' approach, with speakers eager to share authentic glimpses of a hitherto undocumented past. Two important anniversaries are also being celebrated at the Radical History Festival. It is 800 years since the Charter of the Forest was signed granting rights, privileges and protections for the commoner, something which has been central to recent and past struggles to protect the nearby Forest of Dean. It is also 50 years since the ground-breaking History Workshop project was launched, aimed at breaking down barriers between universities and local historians.

So come along to this free event to sample some hidden histories through walking tours, public lectures, puppet shows, theatre and a history bookfair.

The Bristol Radical History Festival is organised by Bristol Radical History Group and the Remembering the Real World War One Group.
